Tokyo Contemporary Art Award 2021-2023 Award winners, Award Ceremony, and Symposium Announced

The Tokyo Metropolitan Government and Tokyo Arts and Space (TOKAS) established the Tokyo Contemporary Art Award (TCAA) in 2018 as a contemporary art prize to encourage mid-career artists to make new breakthroughs in their work by providing them with two years of continuous support. The 3rd TCAA (2021–2023) welcomes Sofía Hernández Chong Cuy, Takahashi Mizuki, and Washida Meruro as members of a six-person committee that has selected the award winners. The TCAA (2021–2023) award ceremony and symposium are scheduled for March 2021.

Winners

SHIGA Lieko

Reasons for the Award

Shiga Lieko is highly acclaimed for her thoughtful and earnest attitude toward her reality and production, her exploration of the equivalence between human spirituality and the nature of the photographic medium, and an original perspective that cuts across the nature of photography and the body. She considers how modern society has suppressed the human spirit in the wake of the Great East Japan Earthquake and the reconstruction that has followed. The thought behind her creative process condenses important elements for reflecting on the society in which we find ourselves, including concepts like human nature, center and periphery, death and mourning, regulation and freedom, and harmony with nature. It is of great significance that this award will support her efforts to confront these issues in the creation of her future works.

TAKEUCHI Kota

Reasons for the Award

While Takeuchi's work seems to respond to recent social events in Japan, it is consistent in its concern with the ways in which memory is passed on, the nature of materials as media, and people's passivity to them. His creative practice is highly regarded for its emotional impact and its willingness to engage deeply with the exploration of individual and collective forms of memory. In the new proposal presented here, he questions the ethics of remote technologies, looking at the blindness of remote attacks and a growing dependence on digital media as a source of information. His work presents an awareness of issues that have the potential to be shared by many more people beyond contexts specific to Japan.

■ Chair of the Selection Committee Comment

This year's selection process was made even more challenging with the continuation of COVID-19 and the impossibility to travel. The majority of jury members couldn't be at the artist studios physically. Instead, we relied heavily on studio visits and artist presentations on the Internet. Thanks to the superb organization of the TCAA team and the extreme patience and dedication of each artist, we were able to get a very comprehensive and in-depth survey of each artist's practice.

With a mixture of jury members who have been involved in this award since the very beginning and new jury members, the discussion before the selection process and during the final deliberation was extremely lively and constructive. There have been a lot of reflections and consideration of how this award has been positioned and organized and how to move forward in the future. There has been a considerable amount of self-reflection on the jury's part in terms of the criteria of evaluation. In the deliberation meeting, we were able to discuss each artist in detail, conveying each of our views frankly and fully. The final decision was a well-weighed and thoroughly-discussed one.

At a critical time such as this, when conditions of globalization is subject to challenge and re-examination, TCAA continues to make utmost efforts to connect artists to different aspects of the larger art world. The awards of such an endeavor, supporting artists to continue working and aiming for higher goals, will soon to come to fruition in the near future. As jury members, we are very honored to be part of such an outward-looking and future-looking commitment.

■ Award Winners' Profiles

SHIGA Lieko

Born in Aichi in 1980. Based in Miyagi.

Graduated with an MA in Fine Art New Media from Chelsea College of Art and Design, London Institute in 2004.

“As someone who grew up in a clean and safe environment that favored convenience, my affinity with camera equipment was an extremely violent one,” says Shiga, for whom the space-time of photography was a salvation and excitement greater than “death.” In 2008, Shiga moved to Miyagi Prefecture, where she became involved in the local community and continued producing works related to memories that span generations, thinking about life from imaginations of death, and the relationship between nature and human society. Her experiences in the wake of the Great East Japan Earthquake, which saw the breaking down of social functions along the coast and the unforgiving disposition of the laws of nature, link back to “recovery” efforts seen in postwar Japan, inciting an overwhelming sense of déjà vu. Shiga, through her creative process and production, seeks the roots of the human spirit. Her works are intent on visualizing, through the medium of photography, what she calls “the eternal present,” a moment that is neither past nor future suspended in space-time. They are photographic spaces in which the viewer can see their own body and consciousness reflected back as if looking in a mirror.

TAKEUCHI Kota

Born in Hyogo in 1982. Based in Fukushima.

Graduated with a BA in Department of Intermedia Art from Tokyo University of the Arts in 2008.

Takeuchi Kota's work spans across temporal and spatial divides on the theme of parallel bodies and possession. Across the temporal divide: Aerial imagery to track the whereabouts of Balloon Bombs used during World War II; the reproduction of a photo series of stone monuments taken by a local historian; and footage of the demolition of a 19th-century movie theater. Across the spatial divide: a font designed by a security guard in the exclusion zone following the 2011 nuclear accident in Japan; photo installation of wearing the clothes left in an evacuee's home. Tracing lost histories and collaborating with others in isolated areas, he presents photographic and video installations that integrate research, production, and performance, which come together in one unified action. He tries to access the memories of people through buildings, monuments, sculptures, archives, and interviews with local historians as well as eyewitnesses. Furthermore, he pursues images by more innovative means that include mapping apps, live streaming video, and UAV (drone) cameras. His works explore the relationship between media and human nature and offer a simulated sharing experience between the artist and the viewer.
